ABANDONED MILITARY BASES

Royal Canadian Air Force Station

Vancouver:

(Royal Canadian Air Force Station Sea Island):

Established beside the Vancouver Airport on 22 July 1940 under the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan as No. 8 Elementary Flying Training School. Originally RCAF pilots had grass runways on which to land, but these were eventually replaced by a Congo Mat (Steel Mesh Mat) runway.

No. 13 Operational Training Squadron was also established at the aerodrome in 1940, but its stay was brief as it re-located to RCAF Station Patricia Bay in November 1940. No. 8 EFTS re-located to Boundary Bay and became part of No. 18 EFTS in January 1942.

The aerodrome became was home to No. 22 Service and Repair Depot from 1944-45.

The station remained open after World War II and was re-named RCAF Station Sea Island, but this was later changed to RCAF Station Vancouver. 442 Squadron was re-activated as a 442 "City of Vancouver" Auxiliary Fighter Squadron at Sea Island 15 April 1946, but was later re-designated an Auxiliary Transport Squadron. 123 Rescue Flight and 121 Composite Flight (KU) were also formed at Sea Island. By 1948, Sea Island's runways were linked up with those of the Vancouver Airport

On 1 December 1951, 442 Squadron was split in half to form 443 "City of New Westminster" Squadron.

With the impending Unification in the mid 1960s, a reorganization and consolidation occurred within the Canadian Military. Several bases were either downsized, merged or closed and as a result, RCAF Station Vancouver closed on 31 March 1964.

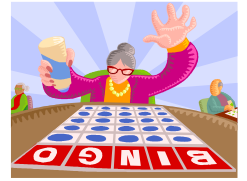

One of the consequences of the closure of the station was the cancellation of a contract to build four additional rooms to the station's elementary school. No. 121 KU Squadron moved to RCAF Station Comox, where in 1968, it was renamed 442 Transport and Rescue Squadron, but 442 Squadron and 443 Squadron disbanded. However, No. 11 Air Movements Unit remained at the former station for several years afterwards.

The PMQ houses became part of the Army Camp at Jericho Beach until 1973, when they were sold and moved onto First Nations Reserves along the Georgia Strait.

Very little remains of the former station. Only the footings of the old base water reservoir and the

SUBJECT: Legion Blog – Call for Articles

Memo #143.14

Do you know any creative writers? Maybe you have some interesting tales to tell yourself? Why not see your name in lights on the Legion's Blog Website?

We are looking for submissions that are on any number of themes like:

- Stories about Veterans or tales from wartimes (even stories of families who were home while their soldier was deployed)
- Patriotism and Legion lore
- Cadet history or interesting stories
- Military family life – could be funny or serious

There are millions of stories out there, and we want to put them on our blog!! If you want to submit a story it will be put through editing process and tidied up for publication. You can submit in your own name or anonymously. Please send an email with your post to info@legionbcyukon.ca

If you haven't seen the blog yet, please click here: <http://legionbcyukonblog.org/> There is some really good reading on there. The bit about the snake in a Military vehicle in Afghanistan is very funny! There are also serious pieces commemorating important stories from the Great War, and a heart wrenching piece from a young Veteran about his PTSD and how it happened.

If you want to get posts sent to your email as they are published, it is easy to subscribe: <http://legionbcyukonblog.org/about/> Just put your email address in the box for subscriptions, and you will get any new articles posts.

I know we have some budding Shakespeare's in our membership, show us your stuff! Some of the best posts of the year will also be published in the Military Service History Book! Your friends and family will want your autograph.

Questions or ideas? Feel free to contact me.

10 Cool Facts about Robbie Burns

1. His handsome mug is everywhere- There are more public statues of Burns around the world than any other writer. Apparently, only Queen Victoria and Christopher Columbus have more statues when it comes to non-religious figures.
2. People have been preserving his legacy since 1814.
3. He's a hit songwriter- The Guinness Book of World Records recognizes Burns' Auld Lang Syne as being one of the three most popular songs in the English language, eclipsed only by Happy Birthday and For He's a Jolly Good Fellow.
4. He was hugely popular in the USSR- In 1956, to mark the 160th anniversary of his death, the Soviet Union commissioned a commemorative stamp, making it the first country/constitutional state to honour the poet in such a way.
5. Michael Jackson was a huge fan- He recorded a collection of show tunes based on Burns' life and work that were never formally released.
6. He inspired J.D. Salinger- Catcher in the Rye was based on his poem Comin' Thro' the Rye.
7. He beat Braveheart (sort of)- In 2009 Burns was crowned the Greatest Scot of all time, narrowly edging out rebellion leader William Wallace, in a public vote.
8. You may not have actually wanted to visit him back in the day- Towards the end of his life, he continued to write poetry but found regular employment as a tax man.
9. Out on a date and need to reference a Burns poem to look sophisticated?- In 2011 the Scottish Government released a free iPhone app that featured a searchable database of every poem he wrote and a handy guide to hosting a Burns Supper.
10. His friends started a tradition in his honour that became and international phenomenon- The first recorded supper took place in 1801 with a few close friends who got together to mark the 5th anniversary of his death. They couldn't possibly have known that, hundreds of years later people from across the Globe would continue to gather to recreate their tribute.
